2.2 Administrative / Biographical History

Since the middle of the eighteenth century the Moravian Church has been engaged in missionary activity among the Inuit of northern Labrador. In 1771 the first Mission station was founded at Nain, which remained the headquarters for the Labrador Mission until after World War II. The main impulse for the missionary venture came from the Moravian Church [Brethren] in Germany and in England. The former provided the bulk of the personnel; the latter, through their missionary agency, the Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel, were chiefly responsible for the financing and supply of the Mission. It was also the Moravians in England who secured from the British Crown the necessary land grants for the Mission settlements. Following the settlement at Nain, other Mission stations were founded at Okak in 1776 and at Hopedale in 1782, to the north and south of Nain respectively. In the course of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries further Mission posts were established on the Coast of Labrador, extending from Makkovik in the south, near Hamilton Inlet, to Killinek, close to Cape Chidley in the north. At the present day the Moravians still maintain four Mission stations - Nain, Hopedale and Makkovik on the Coast, and an interior Mission at Happy Valley, near Goose Bay, where the Superintendent of the Labrador Province is now stationed.

2.3 Archival History

As the various Mission settlements became established on the Coast, the missionaries set up station archives where they deposited incoming letters, copies of outgoing ones, and other written records. The bulk of these records have been preserved intact down through the years, in spite of inevitable losses consequent upon fires and the abandonment of stations.

In the summer of 1959, at the invitation of the Moravian Church authorities, the Memorial University of Newfoundland sponsored a visit to the Moravian Mission stations by the Professor of German and the Archivist-Historian at the University. They secured several cartons of historical material. After these records were sorted and arranged at the University in St. John's, the Public Archives of Canada microfilmed them in Ottawa. After completion, the original records were sent to the Moravian Archives in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, in 1961. The church books (church registers) of the various Mission stations, however, have been returned to Labrador.

In 2012 Kieran Madden took the records out of the old boxes and placed them in archival folders and boxes. She entered the descriptions from the 1960 finding aid into MAB collections management system. Books that were not already in the library have been integrated into the Archives' library. Duplicates have been separated.

In preparation of a digitization grant application in 2019 some of the descriptions were updated.

2.4 Immediate source of acquisition or transfer

Received from the Public Archives in Ottawa in late February of 1961 and must have arrived here before the end of March 1961.

3.1 Scope and content

The records of the Moravian mission in Labrador essentially cover the period from 1770 to the twentieth century. They are comprised in large part of the incoming and outgoing correspondence of the various mission stations, both correspondence to and from Europe, and intra-Labrador correspondence. In addition, there exist for some stations valuable diaries and annual reports, which chronicle life at the mission throughout the year.

Other items of special importance are the church registers (only on microfilm) and the yearly accounts of goods ordered from Europe and goods shipped to Europe. The Moravian Church operated trading stores in conjunction with its mission work until 1926. Most of the Moravian records relate to the mission stations of Nain, Hopedale, and Hebron. The documents are generally in German, although some of the earliest and latest records are in English.

3.2 Appraisal, desctruction and scheduling information

n.a

3.3 Accruals

Additional Labrador materials are included in the Labrador Collection (LabrColl)

3.4 System of Arrangement

The records are arranged according to mission stations and then according to type of document. The correspondence of each station has been organized into series in terms of its origin and destination. Within the series, letters are filed chronologically.
